

Key things to remember

- You can only allow your child to miss school if he or she is ill, or if you have advance permission from the school.
- Absence requests will only be granted in exceptional circumstances as determined by the Local Authority.
- You can be fined for taking your child out of school if it is unauthorised.

You should refer to the school attendance policy when considering whether to submit an absence request.

Term-time Leave of Absence Requests

Why is attendance important?

Missing a week or two of school for a holiday might not seem like very much, but it can have a big effect on your child's education.

For example, if your child misses two weeks of school every year, this adds up to more than two whole terms over the child's whole time in school.

Making sure your child attends school as much as possible means:

- Your child will have the same education and opportunities as everyone else in the class
- Your child won't need to worry about catching up on work, or that they might fall behind because of missing lessons.
- Your child won't miss out on activities at the start and end of term, which are often fun and a chance to develop friendships

Exceptional circumstances

As a general guideline, exceptional absence circumstances usually apply only to immediate family, such as bereavement. Requests for leave related to extended family and friends are likely to be refused.

Examples of circumstances that are not exceptional may include:

- Cheap holidays, 'once in a lifetime' special trips, or holidays that have already been paid for
- A birthday treat, shopping, hair cuts
- Absence that coincides with important school events such as the start of term or tests
- Visiting relatives, looking after parents, or other family members

What does the law say?

The government changed the rules on term-time absence in 2013.

Under the new rules, you can only allow your child to miss school if:

- He or she is too ill to go in
- You've got advance permission from the school

How do I request permission for an absence?

You must submit a request to the school before you arrange for your child to have time away.

You should speak to your child's teacher, or headteacher, and submit a formal request via the school office.

The headteacher will then consider whether to give permission for the absence.

When will absence requests be granted?

Permission for absence will only be granted in exceptional circumstances as determined by the Local Authority. The headteacher will consider each absence request individually and decide whether to grant the absence. The headteacher will also decide how many days your child can be away from school, if the absence is granted.

What if I still decide to take my child on an unauthorised absence?

If you take your child out of school without permission (except where he or she is unwell), you can be fined, or even prosecuted.

This could involve:

- A truancy penalty notice of £80 if paid within 21 days, or £160 paid within 28 days
- A parenting order, education supervision order or school attendance order where your child repeatedly misses school without a good reason
